

Safety Tips For Dates

Dating services are a big thing on the Internet nowadays. There are tons of companies, such as FriendFinder, with lots of members, making it easy for just about anybody to find people with the same interests. Especially for busy professionals, online dating is a very convenient service.

Even though online dating is so convenient, and you may think that you have found your perfect person, you still have to be safe. If you meet somebody on FriendFinder, and have only talked by email or instant messenger, you do not know if the person is safe. However, following the guidelines below, you can have a safe, happy date, and perhaps your perfect person will become your only person ?.

First, you should make meet that person in a public place. Don't let the date know your home address. Even if you dated the person before, you should be careful. Give out only your cell phone number, because it is possible to trace the home address by a landline number. Don't worry about your date taking offense to it, it is for safety.

Next, you should always meet in a public place with large groups of people nearby. A concert, cafe, or a movie would be safe choices. Never meet in a secluded area or travel to one while on your first date. If possible, try to arrange to bring friends along as a double date. This may seem awkward on a first date but it's important if you want stay safe in the online dating scene.

Another thing you have to watch out for is drinking alcohol. It can impair your judgment or you can let your guard down. If you choose to drink though, try to keep it to a minimum, and stay alert.

Another good idea is to pay half the bill on your first date. By doing so, you will not feel obligated to go on a second date if you are not interested.

Make sure that you tell a friend of yours that you are going on a date. State the place you are going to and when you will be back. Ask the friend to call you after you get home, to make sure you are safe. Or you can end the date by going to your friend.

And last but not least, trust your judgment. If something doesn't feel right, then it probably isn't. If you feel uneasy with the person, don't be afraid of ending your date early. Even though you may have talked with the person a lot by email, sometimes you can only pick up that something is not right with that person when you talk to him/her in person. If you use your judgment and common sense, you will have a great date!
