Every time when you meet new guy through the internet or a club it's hard to tell who they really are. Unless met through your friends or a group trip, you can fall into something unreal.

There are two types of liars, one who say too much and other who say not enough. The first group usually show off with their abilities, money or work. If they paid for a beginner race car lesson they tell they're already nascar drivers. If they wet their leg in the ocean they will tell they were swimming with sharks. Whatever they do, they will present themselves as heroes. The second group are those who hide the truth.

They change subject every time you ask about their personal life, marital status or if they have committed any crime. It's not easy to avoid liars or turn one into positive-minded and honest. If you suspect him of telling a lie, ask him what are the things he likes in people. Then you tell about your own. Let him know that the most important thing is honesty. When he is evading your question, don't let him change the subject too easily. Say that this must be very interesting and you would really like to know the story. You can comfort him with telling "you can tell me anything". If you're sure that he is lying or is much stressed of your insisting leave it. You already know there's something wrong and you don't want to hear "I have murdered someone yesterday" to become another witness. Watch his behavior. If he is nervous, looking elsewhere, rapidly drinking or grabbing food probably he still want to change the topic because his glass is empty or need to walk to the toilet.

Don't get mad about little lies, if he was late and seems to be very sorry don't punish him. You know it's easy to get late and sometimes we lie that we waiting so long for a bus when in fact we had to finish that make-up. If you have found out he is a liar when you meet his brother on the street or his friends who say totally different story it might be not worth it. If you don't want to be with a liar just find another guy. Remember, you can never change a liar. You can find a way to know the truth but that will never be revealed by your man directly. Always exchange at least 5 emails before speaking on the phone. The best solution is to invite her for a online chat. Don't use internet cameras for the first time. Just focus on what are you two talking about, don't stress with other things. When you both feel comfortable while you talk, and you're very interested in her you can both exchange your pictures or call each other even for a minute. If you're nervous, you can just give a short call in the evening to a "goodnight" before she goes to sleep. This will be less stressful and give her more confidence. You can send text messages during the day to let her know you're thinking about her. Get your heartthrobs through this online datingsite

Now, if you have chatted for some time in this online dating community, seen more pictures or through camera, talked on the phone you can ask her to go out with you.

For the first date the best place would be the one that requires more activity, like going for a horseback riding or watching a game. If you want to spend more time just being close, you can go to the cinema. If you feel very comfortable and you're sure you can talk with her all night long you can go for drink or a dinner. Don't try to organize your first day in your house or don't ask if you can pick up her from her home. Let her feel safe. Better just ask where to pick her up if you have a car. If the date is successful, you can ask her to give her a lift home.

Try not to spend all your money on a first day as you never know how will you feel at the end. Don't try to impress her with all that money if you're not too rich. Don't buy her, let her fall into you, not into what you've got.
